Jewish Christmas?

What's Jewish Christmas, you may be saying? I've always been in the retail business. As a retailer we get very few days off during the year. Christmas, New Years, Easter, sometimes Thanksgiving and if you happen to be Jewish, Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur. Well, being Jewish we don't have a big Christmas tree, lights and gift exchange (Hanukah Harry does visit on occasion) on Christmas day. What we usually do is sleep in, go to the movies and have Chinese food. That is exactly what we did yesterday. All the theatres were packed. We had planned to see The Curious Case of Benjamin Bottom. It's the story of how Brad Pitt is born a little old Jewish Man and gets younger as he ages and has wonderful adventures with a scarecrow, a lion, a mechanical man and they invade Earth and say "Klatu, barratis nikto!!" and everyone eats popcorn and then go home wondering why Angelina Jolie has such huge lips. So instead we saw "Marley & Me" what I thought was the touching story of how Scrooge is redeemed after mixing his sprits overnight. It turns out that the movie is about how well trained my dog is and how hot Jennifer Aniston is and why would Brad Pitt ever leave her for Angelina Jolie. It must be the lips. Anyway after the movie, like all good Jews on Christmas, we descend on the closest Chinese or at least Asian style restaurant. We chose Thai. Upon entering we find that every person of Hebrew descent within 200 miles(18,000 people) are ahead of us in line. But we made a reservation!!! We watched as a table of vibrant 30 something's became a group of haggard octogenarians requiring walkers and oxygen and they still hadn't gotten their appetizers. My brother and his family are still in line waiting to be seated. They tell me we'll have a table by Saturday noon as soon as they octogenarians figure out who had the wonton soup and pad-Thai noodles.

Don't wait we'll make your holiday party easy and no lines. We have a complete selection of appetizers, and entrée's and desserts for Chanukah and New Year's.
